Nanticoke Indian Tribe Marker - Indiantown

Indiantown is an area in northern Lancaster County lying between Clay and Schoeneck. It is where the Nanticoke tribe stayed for some years in the early 1700s during their resettlement migration from the Eastern part of Maryland to the Wilkesbarre area in Pennsylvania, and then finally on to the Iroquois in New York. The other part of Lancaster County that was known as Indian Town (usually two words) was the encampment of the Conestoga tribe near the Susquehanna River south of Washingtonboro.

Two good references are the books, "Indians in Pennsylvania" and "Indian Paths of Pennsylvania", both by Paul A. W. Wallace. These are published by The Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission, Harrisburg, Pa. The various publications they list are authoritative and reasonably priced.
